CASE STUDIES

How INTLINGO delivered high-quality IPO translation under an extremely tight deadline?

CASE	A client sought our help in translating around 200 pages of a new IPO prospectus from English to Traditional Chinese within 2 working days
CHALLENGE	 The client originally gave us 5-7 days to finish the drafting and editing, but he suddenly changed his mind and reduced the time to only 2 days. Therefore, we had to: Adjust the schedule of our existing jobs to free up capacity for this sudden request Find enough qualified and experienced linguists to complete the translation in order to reduce the time spent on editing
SOLUTION	Our resourceful project management team used all of the resources available to fulfill the sudden request, which included: • In-house translators to ensure stable manpower throughout the process • Shift-work arrangement to provide round-the-clock translation services • Well-established translation memory database and glossary lists for consistency and accuracy
оитсоме	INTLINGO successfully delivered the translation on time to the client without compromising the quality

How INTLINGO improved the translation quality of a chairman's statement?

CASE	A listed company requested our translation services for the chairman's statement in their annual report because they were unhappy with the original translation done by another translation house
CHALLENGE	 The client wanted the translation to read like an original work written in the target language rather than a mere translation. Therefore, we had to pay extra attention to: Readability and fluency, i.e. whether the translation sounded natural in the target language Choice of words, i.e. whether lexical collocations conformed to the target language's habits and culture
SOLUTION	 Our translation team thoroughly studied the client's requirements and pinpointed the problems of the original translation. We adopted: A translation approach that could preserve the original meanings while keeping the text smooth An appropriate but not a rigid tone and writing style Our standard operation procedure plus another round of review performed by an experienced editor оитсоме	The quest was not in vain. Our translation not only delighted our client but also turned it into a longtime business partner
